Preface

Welcome to the south of Luxembourg: an up-and-coming region with a high quality of life.

Education is an investment for the future. What could be better than studying in a region with a strategy for the future based on education and research? One region with just that in mind is the south of Luxembourg. In Belval, which lies directly on the border with France, the Cité des Sciences (City of Science), an international hot-spot for education and research, is being created. At the heart of all is situated the new campus of the University of Luxembourg (www.uni.lu).

Like hardly any other European university, the University of Luxembourg offers the perfect balance of international excellence and local relevance, representing the driving force behind Luxembourg's innovative economy and its emerging research activities.

The south of Luxembourg is part of this momentum. From the outset, this region has helped steer the country onto its course towards the future. It's no wonder, since this region shares the same values as the university. What's more is that it is traditionally open-minded, while still keeping its own unique character.

STUDY IN THE SOUTH

Studying in the south of Luxembourg

Can I study in Luxembourg? Yes, you can! And soon even in the South of the Country. Founded in 2003 in Luxembourg-City and Walferdange, the University of Luxembourg is multilingual, international and research-oriented. Students and researchers arrive at a modern institution with an intimate atmosphere that is only a stone's throw away from European institutions, international companies and the financial district of Luxembourg.

The country's multiculturalism is part of everyday life on campus: students from 100 different countries, and researchers from 60 nations. Whether in English, French or German, many of the study programmes are taught in two, sometimes even three, languages. Not only that, several Master's courses are taught only in English.

What's more, the University places huge importance on travel: those studying for a Bachelor's degree are required to spend a semester abroad, and there are also options for Master's students to do the same. With this in mind, the university has exchange programmes with 60 universities across Europe and overseas.

At the moment, almost 6,300 students and more than 200 lecturers are currently spread out over 3 locations and faculties. These three faculties, namely the Faculty of Science, Technology and Communication, the Faculty of Law, Economics and Finance, as well as Faculty of Language and Literature, Humanities, Arts and Education, offer students the choice of Bachelor's and Master's degrees, as well as postgraduate studies.

The campus Belval, tailored to the needs of a young, modern and fast growing university with a unique vision, provides the space required by such a university. But no need to worry! The personal campus atmosphere, with its intimate seminars and one-on-one support, won't be lost. It will keep its typically Luxembourgish character!

And there's more! Belval is the country's Cité des Sciences: home for expected 7,000 students and around 3,000 researchers. The university has 3 general aims: education, research and the exchange of knowledge at the highest international level.

This research and education initiative aims to turn Belval (and the region as a whole) into an academic centre with an impact that is both long term and reaches across borders. The campus is being set up as not just a centre for excellence in research and education, but also as a community that is in touch with those living there. Here, science is seen for all as the foundation of the future.

Spread over 48 hectares, this future can be one that is sustainable – 48 hectares of space for intelligent minds from all over the world, exuding this region's invigorating esprit de corps.

INNOVATIVE LOCATION

Belval, an innovative place to do business

To create a Cité des Sciences in the South Region of Luxembourg, which will become the future research centre of the country, is inspired by a long-term vision. What can be seen in and around the Cité des Sciences is nothing short for a cornerstone of the future of the country, as well as that of its bordering regions. The advantage of being a small country is that, compared to elsewhere, paths are a lot shorter from start to finish, meaning that projects become a reality much faster. The same applies to Luxembourg's emergence as a centre for science, which is part of the country's strategy for the future and the south of Luxembourg was chosen as its base for good reason.

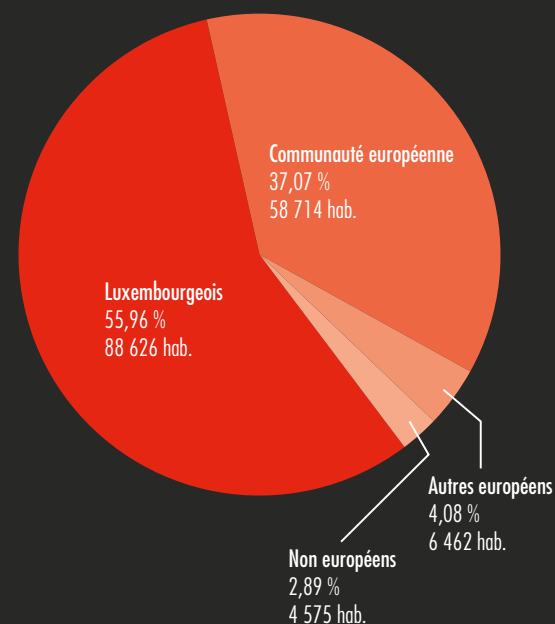

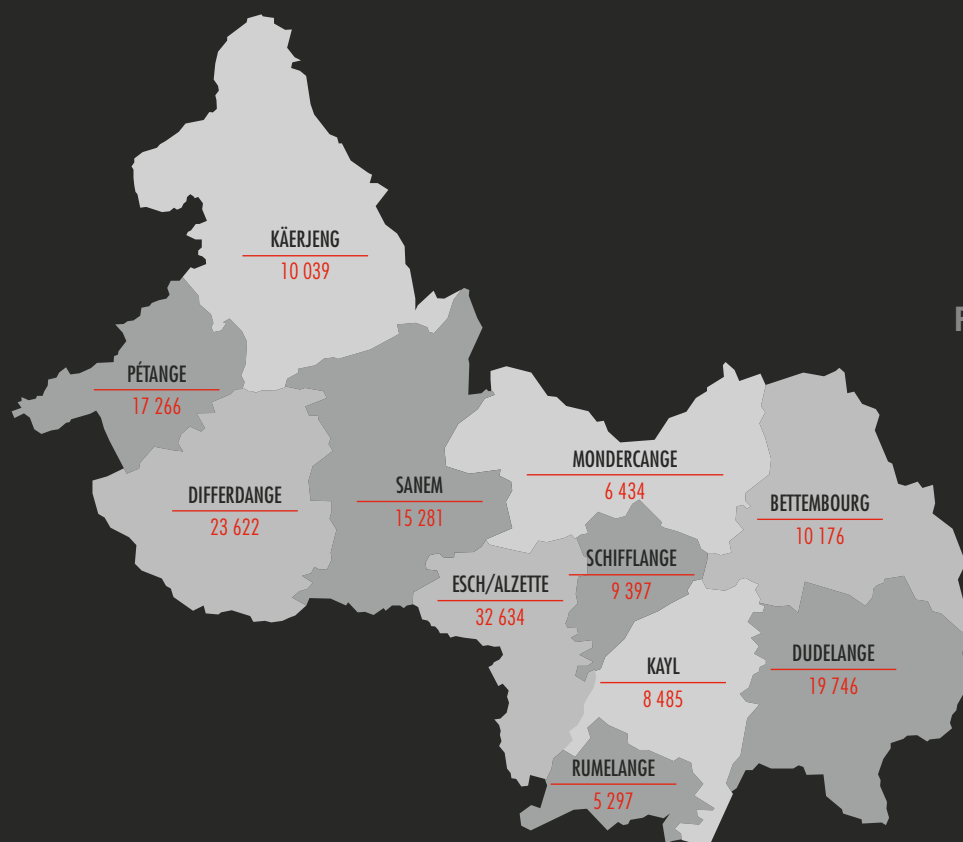

30 years ago, there was next to no research being conducted in Luxembourg. Nowadays, the Cité des Sciences is putting an end to that. Several national research centres, as well as "Luxembourg Institute of Socio-Economic Research", are already located here. Other companies are following and will make up together with the university, one of Europe's most dynamic centres for science. The Cité des Sciences will become a brand new Eldorado for scientists, a giant laboratory where not only research and teaching, but also science and economics, go hand in hand.

Innovative start-up companies are already here, and traditional sectors of the economy are also benefiting from the rapid development that is taking place in and around Belval. The Cité des Sciences is on course to becoming an integral part of the entire region's economy: one in which everyone can play a part.

Liste non exhaustive

The people in the south of Luxembourg

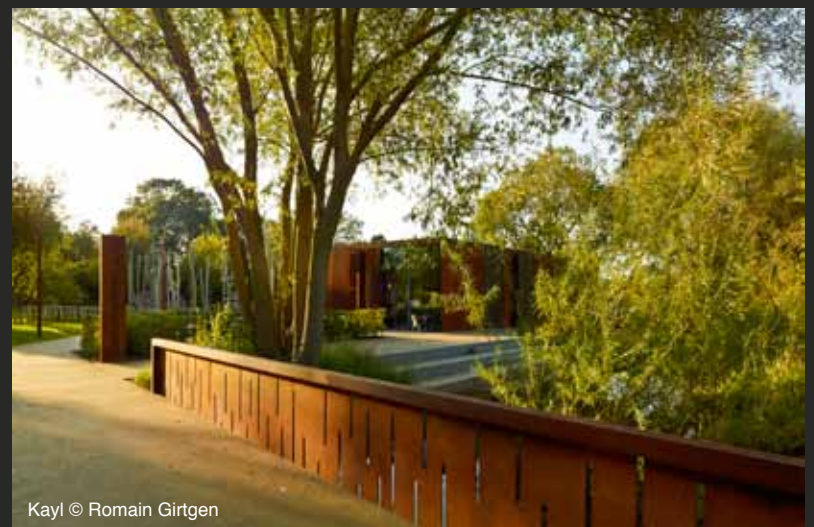

There is so much about the south of Luxembourg that is surprising and there is always something new to experience. Diversity is the norm here, and has been for a long time. People have been coming here since the beginning of the 20th century, at that time it was to work in the mines. Later, the arrival of the steelworks meant that even more workers and their families moved here. The glory days of the steel industry may be over, but the people have stayed.

Unlike in a big city, there is little segregation and no need to fit the mould, as this region is a melting pot of diversity. It has character which, it is always genuine and open. Here, identity is an ongoing, integrative process to which everyone can contribute.

Naturally, everyone who has found their way here since steel stopped being produced in this region also plays their part by shaping Luxembourg's modern economic centre, regardless of where they come from. And let's not forget those who live over the border and come into Luxembourg everyday to work. They all have one thing in common: they are part of a whole, which is continually developing. Science and research are merely the next step in this evolution.

QUALITY OF LIFE

Living in the south of Luxembourg

What is it that defines quality of life? Does an urban lifestyle make a person happy? Or maybe a rural setting? There is something for everyone in this part of Luxembourg. Those looking for city life will find it in Differdange, Dudelange or Esch-sur-Alzette. These cities have everything one expects to find in a city centre, including shops that cater for modern international tastes, as well as cafés and bars for relaxing during the day and partying at night.

Sport and leisure is by no means left out. Still, everything remains pleasantly relaxed and not at all overwhelming. The small communes in this region are a fantastic place to live if you like being surrounded by nature. Sanem, Mondercange, Kayl and the northern part of Käerjeng are nestled among the hills. For something in between urban and countryside living, there are the municipalities of Schifflange, Pétange, Käerjeng, Bettembourg and Rumelange.

Either way, all towns and villages in this region have their own individual character and pace of life. Everywhere, shopping and leisure opportunities are right on your doorstep. That's because all aspects of life are not catered towards living in one large metropolis. Whether it's an art nouveau apartment, a modern house with a garden or a studio in the redeveloped miners' settlement: this region offers rewarding experiences to suit your lifestyle.

Transport in the south of Luxembourg

People want to be mobile. In the south of Luxembourg, the need for mobility has long been part of the agenda. The public transport system here works effortlessly, turning travelling into something spontaneous. The trains and buses (running several times an hour) are coordinated to work together in efficient harmony, connecting all the towns in the region. This means no waiting around and looking at your watch: as soon as one bus or train leaves, the next one is soon to come long. Not only in the large communes, but in the smaller ones too.

Furthermore, there are excellent connections to the rest of the country, with trains and buses going to Luxembourg City. From there, you can quickly and easily get to other parts of the country or to the border towns in Belgium, France and Germany. For those who prefer to be in the driver's seat, this region has a modern and extensive road network.

When it comes to travel, the south of Luxembourg has one great advantage, namely its central location. Situated on the crossroads of major European transport routes, with road and rail networks that are a part of the European transport system, and with Findel airport only 25 kilometres from the Cité des Sciences, this region is, all in all, ideally reachable: accessible from everywhere and for everyone.

CULTURE

Culture in the south of Luxembourg

Culture gets people moving in this region, as well as sport. In both areas, there is a large and versatile range of things to do. If it's a gig you're looking for, then the Rockhal in Belval is the place to go. For years now, the Rockhal has been the place for rock and pop, playing host to the hottest international acts. Those who prefer something quieter can pay a visit to the region's small and large theatres or one of its many cinemas: whether you prefer Hollywood blockbusters or art-house productions, there is something for everyone.

In addition, this region's many local festivals and cultural centres draw in a crowd from even across the borders. Whether it's the Blues Festival in Differdange/Lasauvage, the Kulturfabrik in Esch-sur-Alzette, the „Schongfabrik“ in Kayl or the Jazz Festival „Op der Schmelz“ in Dudelange, both quality and quantity are definitely in abundance.

Sports and leisures in the south of Luxembourg

When it comes to sport, here too, people look for quality. This region offers the chance to do all kinds of sports (at every level) in its untold number of clubs. You can find everything you need: if you want to take the plunge, eight swimming pools are located in the area between Dudelange and Pétange, and there are also plenty of tennis and fitness centres, as well as cycling and running routes. With all of this, it's hard to get bored and things are only just getting started: a thriving university campus has an invigorating effect on sports and culture...

SHOPPING & RESTAURANTS

Shopping & food in the south of Luxembourg

Are you looking for trendy shops, restaurants of all kinds or a place to party? The south of Luxembourg has all this in one place. Not only is the pedestrian zone in Esch-sur-Alzette the longest in the country, it also offers an enjoyable, comprehensive shopping experience. Shops are filled with fashion that is à la mode in the big city – in different styles and price ranges. In addition, the other communes and retail centres in the area have plenty shops that will seduce your bank card.

It's not only the shopping that's enticing, but the food too: looking for an authentic Italian pizza in north of the Alps? Then look no further. Seafood lovers can get their fill in the countless Portuguese restaurants. Whether it's European or Asian, North African or South American, the international cuisine here is all authentic. From simple to sophisticated: pots are boiling over with variety and originality.

After getting your fill, it's time to go out. Discover clubs that play the sounds of chart hits, Latin beats, hip hop and electronica, as well as an endless selection of cafés and bars that range from trendy to timeless. In amongst all this, be it a street café or a pub, not to mention the many festivals, there is something for every mood and any time of day.

In a nutshell, there is fun to be had everywhere. It just goes to show that here in the south of Luxembourg, anyone can feel right at home.
